

Powers Sinks into Political Stars

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Francis Gary Powers sank back into cloak-and-dagger obscurity Wednesday.

He slipped out of the limelight after telling his story to a Senate Armed Services Committee — adding that he was still working for the Central Intelligence Agency.

This was a far cry indeed from what he said at his last public appearance — in Moscow's huge Hall of Columns Aug. 28 1960, when he was sentenced to 10 years for espionage after his U2 plane was downed in the Soviet Union.

At that time, in soft and hesitant tones, Powers told the three-man Russian military court that, if he ever got out of Soviet jails, he would have nothing to do with the mission that got him jam.

"It's back to the hills of Northern Virginia," said, in a by-the-way turn from the hills of Northern Virginia.

But, judging from his testimony Tuesday, it's really back to the hills of Northeastern Virginia where the CIA has its headquarters.

The New York Times editor of National Review, who called for New York Magazine, who called for orders as follows: "To the Joint Chiefs of Staff: Prepare for an immediate attack on Havana. To the Joint Chiefs of Staff: Prepare for an immediate attack on Berlin. To the Joint Chiefs of Staff: Prepare for an immediate attack on the Congo. Change his oft-cited spot had been to encourage